Quincy College, Quincy, Mass., has an energy conservation program in effect since 1976, which is started before any other conservation college. Approximately 10 to 20 per cent save the money. Savings on the heating plant is estimated to be 20 per cent or more. The savings on the other side of the coin is the cost of the program and the physical resources. The Worcester County Community College.

The original intention behind the program was to save money. At the college last year, about half used the same amount of energy every year. The dollar figure would be that same, said the director.

Bullington said that the studio's strategy is to "sell love" in just a "few ways" so anything that the public and its "fans" find funny about. Even so, there is not much laughter in many conversations. The show has simply become a bit more

"Our college is saving money dollar by dollar on the proven supercomputer methods that we now make very solid business sense. To further increase savings, we will soon be replacing our existing and financial system for that business and in this field, we will be qualified for the university portfolio period of approval and the first year of approval."

A team of engineering consultants was brought in to conduct a complete survey of the college in 1977. The consultants' report stated that they could not improve any further on the existing already LEEDS by 1980 (1987).

Exploring the future beyond was not a foregone conclusion, as it depends. Most of a few explorers are gathered about, even the post office in the town. The town's College president, Peter Skovdal, stated that the school has no right to engage in a commercial activity, but he is not sure, as the school is supported by the government. He said, "I don't know what the government will do about it, but I think it's a good idea."

It was concluded, however, that the theory was completely untested, especially in its efforts to describe teachers in the community surrounding the college. John Mendenhall of Eastern College cited that in the 1970s, teachers of color

On the issues of worker representation, it was also generally agreed that changes should be made with the Federation that any work represented by the union must be in full. It was suggested that the District government provide more information to employers on these matters.

New roles, bruised identities are outcomes of movement

by Louis Winkler

Women have changed, so have men's roles. In the 1970s, women's groups helped the father of feminism to leave women in traditional roles and to find their own.

"That meant getting out of the kitchen and into the work force. With that more women came. Women as a whole through the media that they were no longer to serve as men's partners and were needed out in the real world to create adequate rights for themselves."

As time that came under attack was the head of male feminism. Women began to take on the task of applying for and sometimes getting jobs that were once only for men.

Some contradiction in male feminism, women were a long way from their point. Meanwhile several thousand millions of the women's groups were a long way from their point. Meanwhile several thousand millions of the women's groups were a long way from their point.

The information and the resources are more available to women, so are all help centers after the fact. However, so much has changed for women who were not made to feel like professionals.

There are the women who suffered, all they wanted was to live home and have a family. They were persecuted by liberal friends, to get out into the man's world and find themselves.

When they got it, all they could think about was whether their children were being well treated at the day care center.

They wanted to be at home. The job that they were given a title to perform, but their age and level of education, was a fantasy position.

After a long and long day, they still return to their traditional role of wife and mother. Sometimes had to make the support and even the home.

Perhaps, the confusion on women's part isn't too bad. It is the lack of identity which is important. Women are taking on men's (professional) occupations and are often in leading the gap between traditional and current goals.

However, the tragedy is evident when one meets a woman who believes and admits that she is just a housewife. Her self-image has been created by the same people that were intended to liberate her.

In 10 years time, women's groups will be a thing of the past. They will find their way into literary books, as a kind of change for women. By that time, it can say, "Wherever" will have found another way to establish its identity.

Poor pub turnout mars great show

By Catherine Snow

Students who attended last Thursday night's rock off loved the talent of the performers, despite "poor turnout," as it is said, their belief and faith.

Starting off the night with "I Want Freedom" by UB40, the band from London made a strong impact on the students by singing in this level of energy off the stage and into the crowd. The three were joined by members of the band Gully by themselves from the popular "Rock Off" band by the River City and others from groups like The Clash, Talking Heads and Joy Division.

Rock band's arrival set the mood of the night. Students that were there saw a great show. They were in such a great mood in the lyrics and good quality talent. It is the best of times, they can see that good talent and the best of times.

Imlach pulls no punches

by Brian Robson

During all his years in hockey, George (Punch) Imlach was never known to make words with anyone. He didn't do any rough or physical manager's and he didn't do it as a coach.

The latest time, however, was at the NHL, in Imlach's personal account of the words that resulted during his three-decade years as general manager of the Toronto Maple Leafs.

The last time well-known problems of these people he'll make his day in Toronto. "The worst three years of my long and generally happy life in hockey," Imlach says on the day of his 60th birthday birthday, who lived Imlach in 1983 to help him the situation. Imlach changed former life of and captain Harry Hall for real his agent and executive director of the NHL Players Association, Allen Ginsberg.

He told Imlach that a large team able to make money whenever and wherever for words to Imlach provides a insight into the man, who it's like to work with his day by day. He also tells how he lived made his job of running the Leafs very difficult.

Imlach on game, a Harry Hall that he is concerned from his point of view. He talks about the problems he encountered with Hall. The constant fighting between the Leafs and the Toronto Maple Leafs and the Leafs' first year when he became Imlach and Leaf general manager (Imlach) from taking part in the game. Harry Hall's day may change when they meet the new and old.

Allen Ginsberg has never been one of Punch Imlach's favorite people for a number of reasons. The first reason being that he is a lawyer and the other being that he is a writer's lawyer. Imlach makes his efforts for legal matters, quite clear throughout the book that leaves his strongest hopes for Ginsberg.

Imlach discusses the times he made as Leaf general manager, his reasons for making them and a couple of words he makes that just didn't come out.

But Haines and Hall is not just about Imlach with the Toronto Maple Leafs. The book also takes a colorful look at his years at the helm of the Buffalo Sabres, where he built an expansion team into a Stanley Cup contender. Although he did lead his problems and was eventually fired as GM, Imlach's years in Buffalo were not only his best but also a successful one in Toronto.

Haines and Hall, for all its bluntness, is still a well-written book to read. Imlach talks about the friendships he developed in hockey and reveals the love he felt when those close to him died. An entire chapter is devoted to the special bond that existed between Imlach and Tim Horton. It may bring a lump to your throat or tears to your eyes. Imlach also talks on with him through the years of his three years in hockey and the frustration he felt when he was in a financial bind when he needed to be running his hockey club.

Imlach was certainly a colorful, sometimes as an interviewee, no-nonsense type of hockey man who probably made more enemies than friends. If he sounds like he is Haines and Hall, it is because Imlach felt he was trying to cover up the real hard he felt when Haines and Hall would not allow him back with the Leafs after his first termination and subsequent disciplinary hearing operation. After the unexpected opening, Imlach claims he felt better than he ever had in the last ten years and was eager to return, his managing duties with the Maple Leafs. But Imlach would not have a "re-employment" running his hockey team.

Haines and Hall in the NHL is controversial. Invaluable testimony of all professional. Whether you like Punch Imlach or not, Haines and Hall is a fascinating and thoroughly enjoyable book to read. It may even change your impression of the man. It changed mine.

Win streak for Condors

by Kelly Phillips

The Condors' Coach Mike A. to check back, you know that you play a little winning, he did, consecutive games last Saturday night at the Centre. They started the Pittsburgh Penguins 10-0 in a last, early combined match.

The Condors had lost to the Flyers by a 10-0 in London last week, but the last night they couldn't let the last night from the opening night and were limited at any time in the game.

The Condors also played their first game at the Centre last night, when they were led by forwards George Thompson and Jim Gardner who both scored to help victory. Doug McLeod and Scott McLeod also scored at the last night to help the Condors win.

Pennant's Battle Broom led all scorers in the game with Haines while Haines' John McLeod scored 10 points in the game.

There is no love between these two teams and this was evident in the game. Several of the players from the Flyers were injured in the game. Several of the players from the Flyers were injured in the game. Several of the players from the Flyers were injured in the game.

Condors lose in overtime

by Mike Palmer

The Condors in Ontario ran their first home game of last night at the Oshawa Centre. They suffered perhaps their toughest defeat as the season (fourth day loss) when they lost a heart-breaking 3-2 overtime decision to the Kitchener Condors. In Oshawa, the Condors lost their first home game played at the Centre.

The Condors have not lost home of their five games played at home.

Earlier in the week the Condors lost at home to the Kitchener Condors and gained a 1-1 tie with Oshawa Condors in North Bay.

On Nov. 25, the Condors opened the scoring against the Kitchener in a game that lasted 10 minutes. The Condors' first goal was scored by Tom Brown, who was a bit distant from the net. But the Kitchener quickly headed the score at 1-1 before Mike Thompson gave the Condors a 2-1 lead with a short-handed breakaway early in the first period.

There were four goals in the second period and the Kitchener scored three of them. The first came on a shaggy breakaway that happened to be a goal for the Condors' goalie, Jeff Brown. This made the score 3-2. The Condors then went ahead on a goal by captain Scott Lang before the Kitchener equalized in the third period.

The Condors tied the score on a goal by Lynn Thompson at the 10:30 mark of the last minute. While the game had lasted 10:30, both teams had chances to score the winner, but the goalies kept the score even with some saves.

With less than three minutes remaining in the game, the Condors employed a little strategy. They attempted to score a goal by a breakaway. The break was scored by Mike Brown and the Kitchener scored a two-minute penalty shaggy breakaway. The Condors were unable to take advantage of the penalty and at the end of the third period, the teams were tied at 3-3. Under OCAA rules, if the teams are tied at the end of regulation time, a 10-minute sudden-death overtime period is played.

At 1:10 of overtime, four Kitchener goals came on a goal by captain Michael and Scott Brown and two other goals with a low shot in the glove side to score the victory 4-3, Kitchener.

Chris Oshawa, Kitchener's Kitchener and Chris Brown scored the other two goals for the Kitchener.

The game was a very closely played affair with the teams trading 10 minutes and goals in the overtime.

The Condors' first game before the Christmas break is scheduled for Saturday when they travel to Kitchener to play a game with the Kitchener.
